Introducing the European Union Between Supranationalism

Paul-gilbert Colletaz paul.colletaz@gmail.com The press often portrays the European Union (EU) as a remote, almost foreign authority which makes decisions and forces them on its member states. As a consequence, it often fails to portray the power of the member states in the EU decision-making process. This debate involves two concepts: supranationalism and intergovernmentalism.

The Political and Security Committee A Case Study in

Abstract. Discussions regarding the functioning of the EU often posit two alternative models: an inter-governmental one, in which the emphasis is laid on how states interests are reconciled and national governments retain a central role; and a supra-national one, according to which a leadership role is granted to supra-national institutions such as the Commission or the European Parliament.
