Introduction systematicity the nature of science

The philosophy of science in practice is yet another prominent recent approach to the study of science. While philosophers of science before the 1980s were predominantly concerned with theories as final products of science, Ian Hacking, Nancy Cartwright and others began to promote a new focus on scientific practice (see Soler et al. 2014).

Naturalistic Approaches to Social Construction Stanford

Any discussion of naturalistic approaches to social construction is complicated by the fact that naturalism itself has no very widespread and uniform understanding (see Naturalism). Still, the prospect seems provocative, in part, because social construction has come to be associated with a critical anti-realist attitude towards science.
